SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

Unmanufactured wool was last year sent abroad to the amount of 4,679,109 pounds, valued at $184,463.

Dried apples were in demand last year in Europe, 7,085,946 pounds of the American product going there, for which $461,214 was returned to this country.

Maine may have to provide this year's crop of "sardines," as the French sardine box soldiers have gone on strike just as the fishing season opened. They object to the employment of women and of labor-saving machinery.

Plans are well under way for the expending of $2,000,000 on the canal of New York state, for which the people voted at the last election by a majority of 243,505, and it is expected that the work will be done in the next two or three years.

It is said that Dr. Max Wolf, of Heidelberg, who has discovered a number of asteroids, has never directly seen an asteroid. His discoveries have been made from the photographic plates, on which the planets appear as short lines, owing to their motion, while stars are shown as points.

A serious source of loss of the precious metals is in the attrition of coins. It is estimated that the gold coins of the value of ten dollars will lose from one to three grains of its weight in five years, and that a silver dollar will lose ten per cent. of its weight in the same time. This loss, of course, is irretrievable.

Many insects can fly faster than birds. The common house fly can ordinarily fly 25 feet a second. But when it is alarmed it has been found that it can increase its rate of speed to over 100 feet per second. If it could continue such rapid flight for a mile in a straight line it would cover that distance in exactly 33 seconds.

Friedrich August Kekule, professor of chemistry at the University of Bonn, who has just died at the age of 77 years, by the discovery of the four-toned character of carbon established the basis for the modern theory of chemical combinations. The paper describing this discovery and Kekule's later paper on the theory of benzene are the most important speculative works in chemistry of this generation.

PERSONALITY OF THE POPES.

Two or Three Bad Men Responsible for the Evil Spoken of Them.

Two or three bad men are responsible for almost all the evil that has been said and written against the characters of the popes in the middle ages. Erasmus of Naples; Caraffa, of Mediolani, another Neapolitan who reigned as Paul IV.; and Rodrigo Borgia, a Spaniard, who was Alexander VI., are the chief instances. There were, indeed, many popes who were not perfect, who were more or less ambitious, avaricious, warlike, timid, headstrong, weak, according to their several characters; but it can hardly be said that any of them were like those I have mentioned, really bad men, through and through, vicious, unscrupulous, and daringly criminal.

Paul IV. outlived most of his vices, and devoted his last years to ecclesiastical affairs, but Alexander died poisoned by an accident.

According to Guiccardini, the pope knew nothing of Caesar Borgia's intention of poisoning his rich friend, the cardinal of Convento, with whom they were both to sup in a villa on August 17, 1502. The pope arrived at the place first, was thirsty, asked for a drink, and, by a mistake, was given wine from a flask prepared and sent by Caesar for the cardinal. Caesar himself came in next and drank likewise. The pope died the next day, but Caesar recovered, though badly poisoned, to find himself a ruined man and a fugitive. The cardinal did not touch the wine. This event ended an epoch and a reign of terror and it pilloried the name of Borgia forever. Alexander expired in the third room of the Borgia apartments in the ravings of a terrible delirium, during which the superstitious bystanders believed that he was conversing with Satan, to whom he had sold his soul for the papacy, and some were ready to swear that they actually saw serpents in the room when he was dying. The fact that these witnesses were able to recount the details speaks well for their coolness, at all events.—F. Marion Crawford, in Century.

Male and Female Oaks.

Mr. Knight, the eminent English botanist, has made some curious and interesting investigations on the production of flowers of different sex in the various species of oak tree. He shows that as a rule that species of tree bears the male and female flowers on separate individuals, but that these different individuals may be made to produce flowers of either sex at will. In forcing the female oak to produce male flowers, and vice versa, Mr. Knight employed light and heat, regulating the supply of both to suit himself and according to the end in view. This remarkable series of experiments proved that, if the heat was excessive as compared with the light, male flowers only appeared. On the other hand, if the light was excessive and the temperature comparatively low, nothing but female flowers were produced. In other species of trees which bear the male and female flowers on separate individuals the experiments of the botanist were not so conclusive as in the case of the oaks. However, it is believed that these investigations will finally lead to the conclusion that in the majority of trees and plants the cultivator will be able to produce sexes at will.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Pigeons in Jelly.

Boil a calf's foot. Put the broth in a pan with a blade of mace, a bunch of sweet herbs, pepper, salt, lemon peel, a slice of lean bacon and the pigeons. Boil them. When done, take them out and allow to cool. Carve the jelly with the whites of two eggs, and strain it through a thick cloth. Put the jelly over the pigeons and garnish.

MAKING GOLD MINES PAY.

Millions Sometimes Must Be Invested to Realize Any Success.

There are no hard and fast rules in regard to making a mine from the time it passes into the prospector's hands until it becomes a dividend-paying. Many mines are such, as the owners say, "from the grass roots" and turn out large quantities of ore from the beginning.

J. B. Haggins, the millionaire mine owner, took $3,000,000 from the Custer mine in Lemhi county, Idaho, before it became necessary to use a candle. This mine was known as the Mineral Mountain. A man came along one day, and after looking at it remarked: "Why, the hanging wall is gone." This was true; nature had assisted the mine in this case; the mountain side had been eroded, leaving the mineral standing there. Mr. Haggins also spent about $2,000,000 in developing the Anaconda mine before it was on a paying basis.
